ington. Many of its pupils bore prominent part in the struggle for independence—foremost among them, General William Campbell, the hero of King's Mountains.

Others helped to lay the foundations of the Constitution of the country, and of the Constitution of the country and of the Constitution of the country and of the Constitution of their native Commonwealth, and of other, States of the Union. In 1782, the rist charler granted by Virginia after the Revolution made it a corporation, and by 1773 its building and equipment was valued at £2,000. It was then that it received the timely endowment that gave it the assurance of future life, and of permanent growth. The Legislature of Virginia had given to Washington fitty shares of stock in the James River company, as testimonials of gratitude for his services in the field, and of his services in the gress. This bequest failed, as the shares proved valueless.

As to the James River shares, he wrote to the Governor of Virginia in September, 1786: "I have, upon the fullest consideration, destined these shares
